THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"In arguing of the shadow, we forgo the substance."
— John Lyly

In heated discussion, East criticized West for his trump lead, claiming a club lead would have led to defeat. Throwing more fuel on the fire, he said, "A trump lead is one of the worst leads in bridge."
When West countered by claiming there was no defense to beat the slam, the most important lesson of the hand was lost in the exchange.

West's futile trump lead gave South an easy time. He riew the remaining trumps, gave West his diamond ace, and claimed 12 winners. He discarded his losing clubs on dummy's red suit winners.

East claimed that a club lead was imperative with West's holding and this bidding. "You must attack and lead from something against a small slam," he claims.

"Hogwash," retorted West. "Against a club lead, the slam is cold. He draws trumps, cashes dummy's hearts, and discards his losing diamond. Then he concedes a club to my king, and his 10 gives him his 12th trick."

Did West have the better argument? His analysis was correct; so lead beats the slam. However, his lead was poor. Against a small slam, the aim is to win two tricks. Assuming the defense will gain the lead only once, it's best to attack on opening lead. Leading from a king or a queen or leading a singleton is best; a trump lead works if the defenders are lucky enough to develop a second winner. They can cash it when they win the expected one trick.
